Oh I Do Like To Die Beside The Seaside!

It is the hot summer of 1976. Concorde has recently carried its first paying passengers at supersonic speeds. Harold Wilson has been returned as Prime Minister for the Labour Party and The Liberals are in the safe hands of Jeremy Thorpe. Meanwhile, in the sleepy seaside resort of Stoneyfield-on-Sea, all is far from well. As the deckchairs are opened in the midst of summer heat, an infidelity is uncovered, a confirmed gambler must pay his debt on pain of death and the Punch and Judy man's temper boils over at a young audience member in front of a large group of holiday makers. Just beyond the dazzling clarity of the azure blue skies, dark clouds of mystery and murder are about to rain down on this otherwise already not very tranquil scene. Can you solve this dasderdly murder?- Dress to impress in your finest flares, your cheekiest cheesecloth shirts and those perfect platform shoes! £160pp

Adlestrop - The Mainline To Murder!

On a fine June day in 1914, four members of the well-to-do Firecrest family set out for a day trip on the Cotswold Line. It's only when they take their seats that they realise that one of their number — the wild and reckless Cecily Firecrest — has somehow disappeared. A week later her body is found — locked inside a trunk at Liverpool docks. The murder was never solved.

Seven years later (1921), the victim's sister, Victoria, comes across a poem: Adlestrop by Edward Thomas. To her shock she realises that it was written about the very same train journey on which Cecily vanished. Her private investigator asks her to recreate the events of that fateful summer's day. Behind the respectable facade all is not well with the Firecrests. Why is Victoria so reluctant to meet the man she will soon marry, Augustus Newman? Why is her cousin Mildred so agitated and her Aunt Ada so evasive? Who is the peculiar Professor Down whistle and what is the clumsy ticket inspector really up to? Above all, how did Cecily disappear on a train — and why did it stop, unwontedly, at Adlestrop?
