Adlestrop - The Mainline To Murder!

On a fine June day in 1914, four members of the well-to-do Firecrest family set out for a day trip on the Cotswold Line. It's only when they take their seats that they realise that one of their number, the wild and reckless Cecily Firecrest, has somehow disappeared. A week later her body is found. The murder was never solved. In 1921, the victim's sister, Victoria, comes across a poem: 'Adlestrop' by Edward Thomas. To her shock she realises that it was written about the very same train journey on which Cecily vanished. Her private investigator asks her to recreate the events of that fateful summer's day. Behind the respectable facade all is not well with the Firecrests. Why is Victoria so unhappy that Augustus is there on the train? Why is her cousin Mildred so agitated and her Aunt Florence so evasive? Who is the peculiar Professor Down whistle and what is the clumsy ticket inspector really up to? Above all, how did Cecily disappear on a train; and why did it stop, unwontedly, at Adlestrop?
